

I appreciate the need for tightened security in the war on terrorism, but the infringement of civil liberties that a rule like this imposes tells us the terrorists have already won; we are turning against our country's principals. The framers of this rule should be ashamed of themselves. By this rule, a citizen can be deprived of freedom and livelihood without being told why, and without recourse through the judicial system. This is universally unjust and clearly violates the 5th Amendment of the Constitution, which states among other things that no person will "be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law". This rule must be amended to provide due process, including fair disclosure and some form of judicial recourse.
